

Spotless Stainless

£25.99 for 0.47 litres

Conventional metal polishes are all very well for easy to access places but what about those awkward nooks and crannies you'll find on smaller stainless steel fittings like hinges and stanchion bases? It's precisely these exposed items that are the first to show signs of corrosion and, according to suppliers Roche Marine, that's where Spotless Stainless comes into its own. Simply paint the patented cleaning gel onto the affected area and it will gently eat away the surface rust leaving the solid metal untouched.

I tried it on the heavily pitted bathing ladder of a friend's old Boston Whaler and left it for half an hour as instructed. Sure enough, after a quick rinse with fresh water nearly all the rust was gone leaving a commendably shiny surface. Having looked at the FAQ section of their website, I probably should have tried a second application to clean up the last few spots but given the decent results already achieved, I wasn't inclined to waste any more of the precious gel on someone else's craft! Hugo Andreae
